

Financial Counselling Australia

FCA is a federated body and has seven organisational members. Our structure is shown in the diagram opposite.

FCA's role is to support the financial counselling profession, providing a voice in national debates. We also advocate for a fairer financial services marketplace, working to prevent problems in the first place.

Individual financial counsellors join their respective State/Territory association. These associations therefore have a direct role in supporting their members, including by providing training and resources and sharing information.

FCA and the State/Territory associations work together closely.
